CONSENT FOR ELECTRONIC COMMUNICATIONS

It is very important that you are aware that computer, email, text, fax, or phone communication can be relatively easily accessed by unauthorized people, and hence can compromise the privacy and confidentiality of such communication. If you choose to allow confidential communication via email, fax, text or phone, you should have a thorough understanding and knowledge of the security and privacy vulnerabilities of the system on which you access it. It is always a possibility that email, faxes, texts and voicemail can be sent to the wrong address, phone and computers. E-mail messages on your computer, laptop, iPad, tablet, phone or other electronic devices have inherent privacy risks, especially when your email is provided through your employer. By providing your email address and cell phone number below, you are hereby offering consent for your clinician, Josh Gressel and his office manager to use email, fax, text and phone messages to communicate with you between sessions on administrative, insurance and billing matters. If you communicate confidential or private information via unencrypted e-mail, fax, text or phone messages, it will be assumed that you have evaluated the risks and made an informed decision and Josh Gressel will understand this as your agreement to take the risk that such communication may be intercepted, and your desire to communicate on such matters will be honored. Please do not use e-mail, fax, text or voicemail for emergencies.

I have read this document and I understand and hereby accept the privacy risks associated with the use of e-mail, fax, text or phone.
